Inaugural Award

A NUMISMATIST columnist is recognized for his significant contributions to the NJNS.

➤ Ray Williams, the author of the "Early American Money" quarterly column for The Numismatist, was awarded the inaugural Exemplary Service Award from the New Jersey Numismatic Society (NJNS). This is the first such award given for extraordinary service to the society since its founding in 1933.

Williams is a well-known numismatist in the field of colonial coins and specializes in New Jersey coppers. According to Peter LaConte, NJNS president, "Ray has selflessly contributed his time and his computer and video expertise to the society for decades. We all owe a debt of gratitude to Ray for being an invaluable component of our society."

GRADING UPDATE

PERFECT TEN

NGC introduces a new grading scale.

➤ This month, Numismatic Guaranty Company (NGC) will introduce NGCX—a 10-point grading metric for modern coins (1982-present) designed to supplement the existing 70-point Sheldon Scale. With the new system, a grade of 10 indicates that a piece has no imperfections at 5x magnification (the equivalent of Mint State-70). The grades cascade down at varying intervals to the lowest grade of 1 (equivalent to Poor-1).

NGCX is not available for regular submissions, but customers can purchase NGCX-graded coins from qualifying retailers (including Heritage Capital Corp., Minshull Trading, the United States Gold Bureau, and seven others). For regular submissions, NGC will continue to use the Sheldon Scale introduced in the 1940s. According to NGC, "While there is no difference in quality between a grade on the 10-point scale and a grade on the 70-point scale, the difference for the hobby is exponential. New collectors now have a clear path to embrace coin collecting." For more details, visit ngccoin.com.

NOTEWORTHY SALE

Bids for the Booty

Heritage Auctions sells famed Fenn treasure.

➤ A total of 476 items from the treasure chest hidden by late Santa Fe art dealer Forrest Fenn were sold in a Heritage Auctions sale on December 12, 2022. (The total sales figures were unavailable at the time of publication.) Fenn announced the treasure hunt in 2010 and included a poem in his memoir The Thrill of the Chase with clues to the chest's location. In 2020 a seeker named Jack Stuef found the chest in Yellowstone National Park, and last year he decided to sell the chest and its contents—including gold U.S. and world coins, gold nuggets, jewelry, pre-Columbian artifacts, and a small sealed jar that purportedly contains a 20,000-word autobiography of Fenn's—to an anonymous group known as Tesouro Sagrado Holdings, LLC. The company kept the chest and enlisted Heritage Auctions to sell the cache in individual pieces. Although the sale broke up the treasure, it also enabled more people to share in the loot and become a part of the remarkable treasure's history.

▲ Items from Forrest Fenn's treasure, totaling nearly 500 pieces, were sold individually in December.

MONUMENTAL TROVE

FUN IN THE MUD

Ancient artifacts could rewrite Roman and Etruscan history.

➤ Last fall, nearly 6,000 ancient bronze, silver, and gold coins, along with 2 dozen bronze statues and votive offerings, were excavated from thermal mud in San Casciano dei Bagni, a Tuscan spa town near Siena, Italy. In ancient Roman times, wealthy families would visit the site to offer statues to gods and goddesses. "Most bronze statues from antiquity were later melted down, which is why this collection is the most important find in the Mediterranean in decades—there are inscriptions with the names of gods we've never heard of," says Massimo Osanna, the director-general of museums at Italy's cultural ministry. The sculptures, which feature wrinkles typical of Roman realism, are an exciting find for art historians, while numismatists will delight in the thousands of coins uncovered, which include a significant number of sestertii and as.

▲ Close to 6,000 ancient Roman coins and over 20 statues were unearthed in Italy last October.

NEW DESIGN

On Point

Maria Tallchief will appear on the 2023 Native American $1 coin.

➤ The United States Mint has revealed the reverse design of the 2023 Native American $1 coin. The piece honors America's first prima ballerina, Maria Tallchief. A member of the Osage Nation, Tallchief broke barriers as a Native American ballerina and spoke out against harmful misconceptions and stereotypes about Native Americans.

The motif, created by Artistic Infusion Program Designer Ben Sowards, features Tallchief posed en pointe in the center. The four dancers behind her are meant to represent other prominent Native American ballerinas Marjorie Tallchief, Yvonne Chouteau, Rosella Hightower, and Moscelyne Larkin, and also symbolize those who follow Tallchief's path today. These women were collectively known as the "Five Moons," and their legacy continues to influence ballet. A moon motif appears behind the ballerinas as a nod to this moniker, and the inscriptions below the scene read MARIA TALLCHIEF and AMERICAN INDIANS IN BALLET. The obverse of the $1 coin will continue to feature Glenna Goodacre's depiction of Sacagawea and her son, Jean Baptiste.
